In commercial matters, a jurisprudence was published in which it was resolved that defects in service of process are not subject to validation simply because they were understood directly with the defendant. For validation to occur, the defendant must be aware of the grounds for nullity and make an express waiver of seeking nullity.

On the other hand, an isolated thesis was published in which it was determined that in amparo proceedings, it is possible to analyze the possible violation of human rights in the execution of commercial contracts and mediation agreements. This is done to ensure that at the time of the agreement, the human right to dignity was respected, there was no exploitation of man by man, and the principles of neutrality, equity, and legality were upheld.

In constitutional matters, a jurisprudence was published in which it was determined who the competent authority is to hear an indirect amparo filed against acts of the extinct Circuit Unitary Courts when the magistrate who issued the act is part of a Collegiate Appeal Court.

Indeed, in this jurisprudence, it was resolved that the amparo must be processed and resolved by a titled person who is a member of the Collegiate Appeal Court, distinct from the one who acted as the responsible authority, with individualized competence.
